Genesis

Origin of the term environment is considered from the French word/term “Environia” which means “to surround”. Environment also refers to biotic (living) and abiotic (non-living or physical) world. So, we can say that the surrounding in which any organisms lives is called environment. Organisms and the environment are two active and composite components of nature, where environment regulates the life of the organisms including human beings. Key to the future of mankind is relying only in sustainable development. Continuously growing problems like pollution, loss of forest, solid waste & e-waste disposal, degradation of Management, Issues in tackling the Technology which originates issues like financial problems, productivity and security issues and Global warming. The United Nations Conference on Environment and Development held in Rio de Janeiro in 1992 and world Summit on Sustainable Development at Johannesburg in 2002 have drawn the attention of people around the globe to the deteriorating condition of our environment. It is clear that no citizen of the earth can afford to be ignorant of environment issues. Environmental management has captured the attention of health care managers. Managing environmental hazards has become very important.

Human beings have been interested in ecology since the beginning of civilization. Even our ancient scriptures have emphasized about practices and values of environmental conservation. It is now even more critical than ever before for mankind as a whole to have a clear understanding of environmental concerns and to follow sustainable development practices.
